Bloodborne Pathogens Online Training

Bloodborne Pathogens (BBP) training is one of OSHA's annual regulatory requirements.

Bergen County Department of Health Services (BCDHS), in partnership with National Safety Council (NSC), has trained employees throughout Bergen County including at-risk employees in school districts, municipalities and county government. Since August 2014 and the launch of our online BBP course we've trained over 5,000 employees.

Compliance

- Meets the current demand in today's computer-based training world with an easy to navigate, customized course.
- Complies with the required training elements mandated by the Bloodborne Pathogens Standard, 29 CFR 1910.1030.
- Saves your staff time to grow your business, we ensure data from NSC's Learning Management System is routinely transferred into our online database for accurate and readily available e-records and compliance reports.

Convenience

- Ensures standardization i.e. prevents variations that could occur with multiple instructors.
- Provides individualized instruction where learning takes place at the user's pace since each participant can go back and forth to review as needed.
- Allows for ease of scheduling at convenient times. Users choose when to start, when to pause, when to stop and can simply return at a later time to where they left off.
- Is cost effective and practical with shift workers.

Assurance

- Post testing- The industry standard for mandatory trainings!
- Allows for learning to be measured for "mastery" of basic concepts as in keeping with Best Practices.
- Minimizes testing fraud with 15 post test questions randomly selected from a pre-determined question bank.
- Provides legal protection for employers by documenting the employee mastered the concepts needed to prevent transmission of these dangerous bloodborne pathogens.
